in impositions of various kinds, but at no time have adulterations of wine been more numerous than at the present moment, or of a form so pre judicial to the public health. Formerly the principal adulteration consisted in the ad dition of water, alcohol and coloring materials of vegetable origin, such as log wood, elder, holyhock and myrtle. But the progress of industry, and especially the discovery of coloring matters extracted from the products of the distillation of coal, has furnished fraudulent wine growers with methods of getting a fictitious are dangerous to the consumers of the wines so treated. In the trade ready-prepared liquids are found under the various names of caramel, "old wine color," "new wine color," and so on, all of which are more or less complex mixtures of gelatine, glucose, alcohol, fucusine, and other substances, in the proportions suitable for giving water or light wines a color which cannot he distinguished by the eye from that of the true "jaice of the grapes." One cubic centimetre of these syrups is sufficient to color a quart of water intensely. My readers may form some by fucusine by the fact that certain houses in worth of these liquids yearly, a pound of which costs less than a shilling, and of which one cubic centimetre suffices to color many litres of vere illness resulting from the use of certain wines sold at Nancy, M. Ritter, professor in the Faculty of Medicine, was instructed by the legal authorities to examine a very large numter of samples of the wine. The analyses made in his laboratory have shown the enormous scale upon which adulteration by the addition of fucusine is purchased by wine merchants in the South. It is probable, not to say certain, that an inquiry of this kind effectually carried out in the great centres of population, and especially in Paris, would establish the existence there of the same adulteration.

Some wines contain enough fucusine to cause serious illness in the persons using them in a very few days. A proportion of 0,025 or 0,030 grammes of fucusine in a litre of wine has been

It at the same time sheds quite a new light upon the Governor's necessity for troops. It would seem that Cham-berlain seeks protection from the honest members of his own party more than from the terrible white democrats. The Governor's excuse—want of money—for not calling the able, the appeal should have come) is admirably disposed of. The members would in any case have had to provide the expenses. The real reason is, however, laid bare—namely, that the malcontent republican members of the South Carolina Legislature would have kicked in the harness and refused to bring a needless discredit on the State. By appealing directly to the President Chamberlain avoided all this disaster to his canvass. If the appeal were not listened to he would be no worse off than before; but if sustained by federal bayonets he hoped to drive the citizens of the State literally into opposing camps, so that any concert of action between the white and negro races to prevent his own re-election would be impossible. The evidence is direct that the respectable republicans who proposed to scratch Chamberlain on election day were equally determined to vote for Hayes. That would not suit Chamberlain. He must have a hot blooded canvass to make tusion impossible. It would be a great stain upon the intelligence of the Palmetto State it marriage day, and in the modern Greek islands the bridal vail is of red silk—a custom which has descended, no doubt, from the "flamen," or ted bridal vail, of ancient Greece, the Romans in old days wearing yellow valls. The Armenian bride, on the most important day of her me, appears in what closely resembles a sack made of rich silk, completely enveloping the figure, feet and head. The face is further hidden by a linen vail, over which falls another of gold tinsel, and a part of the ceremonial is for the priest's wife to dye the nails of the bride a deep red with heaps. The Turkey the bride are deep red with henna. In Turkey the bride appears in rich white satin brocade, shot with silver and benizened with pearls, a jeweled girdle around her waist, her face painted—a crimson patch the shape of a heart on her chin, the rest of the virage a mass of white, except the black, penciled eyebrows.
